

Bookie's Blog, by Bookie

April 12, 2012. Well here's a blog entry on Bookie's Blog from the rea/Bookie. Thanks so much for the help I'm getting this year from Cuba, Grumpy and Malone in writing these summaries. I was finding it difficult to be witty every week. Now I only have to be a quarter-wit! No comments, please!

This week saw the extremes of attendance at the five Slammer events on offer. Only three showed up at Les Vieux Moulins on Tuesday — but a whopping twenty-eight at Mountain Creek on Friday!

The first stars this week were, for the most part, the usual suspects: Ticklar, Woodsy, Lucky and PointZero. But there was one new guy on the block: Harley, a rookie.

There at Mountain Creek he revved the competition, taking down The Therapist, Akeem and NoCents, firing a nifty 80 in the process. And would you believe — surprise, surprise — one of his hobbies is motorcycles! Who'da thunk it?

Another rookie that's made her presence known already is Chill. That's right: Chill not Chilly. After capturing first star at Arnprior last week, she picked up a third star at Mountain Creek. I guess she likes that neck of the woods.

This time she took down IronMaiden, Stevie Ray and T-Bone.

It was a good day for rookies all around as the second star went to BigTee. Congrats!

Well it's a little early in the year to be talking about statistics, but there are a couple of interesting ones.

For once, Ticklar seems to be lagging behind in the number of events.

IronMaiden is our busiest Slammer with eleven events under her belt (garter?) already.

Ticklar is just at seven. Come on big guy!

And in the skins category, the highest number right now is four (no jokes please!).

Lucky is one of these but comes in first in the number of bones gained from said skins — 139! This by virtue of his lone skin at Prescott a couple of weeks ago.

Chef has been out only three times but ties the lead in birds with seven. Will he be the Canadian Birdie Champ this year?

So that's the way this week went!

Thank you all — Bookie, #55
